ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

Every one who has watched the career of this school-fellow must have seen how often the brilliant pupil has succeeded in after life in making nothing of himself but a more or less brilliant failure, while the faithful plodder pressing slowly but steadily forward, has often overtaken and passed his more highly favored rival.
Many a young man has shown marks of great ability while at college, but while he had to tackle the stern realities of life where constant application is necessary he has made a miserable failure. These bright college lights attract so much attention at first, so many bright hopes are indulged in for their future success that when they fail we often find people placing the blame on the college education and declaring that it unfit men for the practical work of earning a living.

It will usually be found that the college graduates who fail in business are men who are easily dissatisfied, drifting from one point to another and lacking some all-absorbing purpose in life on which their energies must be bent. While the successful have had one chief object, and followed St. Paul's maxim "This one thing I do."

What is most needed in every man or woman who has to depend on self for a livelihood, is a proper equipment, self reliance and an object on which all the energies must be bent. The most important equipment is a thorough, broad education.
If any one decides that a college education is necessary for success in their chosen calling, let them consider Ezra Cornell and remember that it is much more easy to attend college now than it was to attend the district school in his day.

A college education is not necessary for success in business. A business man must learn a great deal about his work by actual experience. A man should know something of nearly every subject of interest but above all he should be MASTER of his own particular line of work. A course at college would be a good thing for most men, if they could afford the time and money necessary, and were able afterwards to specially fit themselves for their chosen work. For most young men and women such an education is not necessary and in view of the fact that life is short, perhaps it is not desirable. Very often, however, parents go to the other extreme and neglect to give their children even as good an education as can be obtained in the common schools. A great number leave school when they are mere boys and girls, consequently if they ever have to earn their own living they are compelled to do so in the ranks of unskilled laborers. Then it is that they realize their mistake and become aware of the fact that they were scarcely half prepared for the business of life when they left school.

We are apt to despise the education of fifty years ago and yet there will be greater changes in another fifty years. We judge of the schools of the past not by what their pupils were at fourteen or fifteen, but by what they have since made of themselves. Fifty years from now we will be judged by the same standard.
We are apt to boast of our free education so free that many are free to neglect it.
The time is coming also when woman's sphere will be widened. Increasing intelligence and freedom from prejudice open a larger field for her womanly powers. Even though the gentleman may never be compelled to support themselves there is every reason why they should be thoroughly educated. They may become the leaders of thought—the true rulers of the people. What would be the result if the educated woman has how much more pleasant to mingle with those whose conversation is not confined to the limits of "small talk" which so easily degenerates into gossip.

"Blessed are the educated womanly women; and thrice blessed are the fathers, husbands, sons."

Mr. E. P. Leacock, Ex. M. P. has publicly renounced Protestantism. He is reported to have said in explanation of his change of faith, or rather of church. "I was brought up a Roman Catholic having attended St Edmunds in England and I am merely going back to the faith of my boyhood. All my relatives in England, at least those who are highest up in the social scale, are Roman Catholics." To those who are personally acquainted with Mr. Leac-cock the change will not be a surprise and his reasons will be considered quite as good as could be expected.

Lost in the Blizzard.

A Story of Old Times by a Settler.

With no bluffs or houses in sight, or as far as we knew within reach, our position was not an enviable one, and what next to do we knew not. The icy darkness and arctic cold, combined with the hurricane of wind left us almost in despair. What to do or which way to go we knew not and we were at our wits ends. It seemed best to remain by the load as each previous attempt to leave it had proved fruitless. But to remain there all night was almost certain death. Eventually my brother hit upon another scheme, which was that we should each strike out alone. I remonstrated against such a proposal as a ruinous one, possibly death to each of us. When I think of it now I shudder at the thought, and wonder what could have possessed us to perform such an absurd act. Had it not been for the overruling of a Divine Providence, our fates might have been sealed. When Robert, for that was the name of my brother, had disappeared in the darkness my feelings may be better imagined than described. Not till then did I realize what it was to be lost. I knew not which way to turn, and scarcely knew whether I was on my head or my heels. Sometimes I imagined myself chased by wolves, or "I" up as a daring deed for a straggling team. Then I thought of being buried in a snow drift, and remaining undiscovered until the snow melted in the spring. Such thoughts as these chased through my mind, and many visions of my past life flitted before me. Forgotten acts and words, and unremembered scenes and faces were resuscitated, until I lived more in the past than the present. Meanwhile the blizzard had not abated. The wind howled and moirined through the snow and shrub, as though ringing a funeral dirge at my obsequies. These thoughts, while passing through my mind more rapidly than I can now recall them, at the time seemed more like an age.
A stinging sensation at my understanding below reminded, me however that unless I took more active exercise, I should be compelled to occupy a less exalted attitude, and possibly a snowy bed, or worse still, a snowbank grave with no robes near to cover me with leaves. In despair I urged on the balance of my team, indifferent as to the course pursued. Knowing full well that my only safety was now to keep moving. Hanging on by the tail of my steer, I followed in the rear, whichever ever the animal might take me. I wandered around in this way a long time, possibly an hour, but more like a day, when I felt so overcome with fatigue and anxiety that I called a halt.
I rested until my feet were numb, rather chilly, telegraphic communication to my brain, then I thought discretion the better part of valor, and remembered the maxim, "He that fights and runs away, may live to fight another day." Not desiring of dying for my country's or any body else's good at this particular time, I urged on my ox and made another start for where, I do not know. Anywhere, everywhere, only that I kept from freezing. In this way I moved, east, west, north and south, backwards and forwards like the Irishman, who, on finding a piece of good road, was found walking up and down, backwards and forwards along it for a long time, because he so seldom had a chance to enjoy a bit of good road that he was determined to enjoy it now he had a chance. Though my conduct was similar, my reasons of course were totally different. I wandered on in this uncertain way and in this semi-unconscious mood for a long time, not knowing where I was, and yet afraid to stop. Though a comparative stranger to the country, I was not so ignorant but what I knew the fate awaiting me, if I only stopped to rest. The numbness had come to my feet and a drowsiness was overtaking me, which I might have been able to shake off had I only kept my feet moving. I was in a very bad condition in every respect, but I kept plodding on through the snow, expecting every step would be my last. Presently the wind appeared to have abated, and a faint ray of light appeared on the horizon. I was grateful for the ray, I sat down on the snow and the sense of relief I felt is singularly indelible. I must have fallen asleep or overcome by some kind of stupor, for I imagined myself back to the old log cabin down by the lake, not that one I was endeavoring to reach on the Manitoba prairie, but the one where about nine months ago I had left my Mary Ann with such vows, prayers and tears.

Notes by a "Rambler"

So the "good father" has placed his hands on the head of the illustrious Mr.
Leacock, forgiven his wanderings, taken him into the fold and blessed him. E. P. now declares that the church he has left really belongs to the Roman Catholics and should be in the fold also. No doubt now that the mistake has been pointed out by our distinguished friend, there will be a general exodus, and the successor of St. Peter will be kept busy writing out orders for corner lots in the next world.

But why shouldn't Mr. Leacock indulge in his little conceit about his good judgment when a Protestant minister of Winnipeg, condescends to inform Queen Victoria that she can't become a member of the Baptist church till she believes as he does on baptism, etc. The Rambler felt quite distressed for our dear, old Queen, till he heard by chance that she had yet expressed a desire to leave her own church.

Poor Rambler feels pretty bad since he and "Nonsense" got that flogging from "Observer." But there is one consolation that after due consideration of our case we are declared to have no religion. If religion is as bad a thing as "Observer" says it is we don't want any. He informed us that religion "evaporates in trials and difficulties," "makes us regular Pharisees" etc., and now he says "religion is a safety-brake on the velocity of the wheel of immortality." Wonder if "Observer" ever read "a little learning is a dangerous thing."

What a gallant fight that was at Jacksonville, Florida, last week. We never knew before that men could be such superior brutes, and that in their brutality they had so many sympathizers. Even in Elkhorn men could be found to throw up their hands and cheer for the gallant victor. It is interesting to compare that poor, unoffending, spiritless creature, the first man, with the champion of nineteenth century manhood, Corbett. Before the fight "the eager young Californian was like a bound straining at his leash." When he dropped his name in the second round he was frantic to get at him and finish him. After the knock-down in the third round he again attempted to get at Mitchell and finish his brutal work.
When Mitchell regained his feet "Corbett plunged at him smashing him in the mouth. Mitchell fell heavily and the blood gushed from his mouth and nose." While he lay in the ring senseless and bleeding, Corbett, the gallant victor, was "hugged by his delicious friends and attendants," and the crowd dipped their handkerchiefs in Mitchell's blood "in order to have a memento of the fight."—Free Press, Jan. 26.

"God created man in his own image," Gen. 1, 27. "He is the image and glory of God," Cor. II, 2. How much of the "image and glory" do prize fighters retain. It is a good thing that the papers give the brutality in detail. It will, no doubt, disgust many who have never seen such contests, and regarded them as being in the list of manly sports.

All the Florida crowd needed was a "lynching bee" to make the day a complete success. Canadians wonder how it is that in the States life is of so little value and lynching, with other murders, are so common. The Corbett-Mitchell fight gives the key to the secret. Such scenes have so degraded the people that they are little better than brutes.
"My soul turn from them, Turn ye to destroy,
Where rougher climb
A nobler race display."

May the time never come when Canada will sack annexation with such people such an alliance could never bring prosperity.

Mind Your Own Business

To the Editor of the Advocate.
Sir,—In going through this world a person is liable to get in "certain bad the worst one of the lot being gossiping." The discussion of other people's business when you ought to be attending to your own. Gossiping is, in my opinion, worse than drunkenness, because you may by kindness reform a drunkard, but it is utterly impossible to get a person out of this other rut when once in. The disgusting effect this sort of thing has upon a community is beyond my comprehension to discuss in all its phases, but there is one or two of the evils which I will draw your attention to here. Mr. and Mrs.
Smith are a fine pair. Just before the latest were a Sunday, why had he so much

People whom you had met in 1893, and who had met, perhaps, once in society, and were never likely to meet again, would send you a postcard bearing the date of the New Year, and a note saying, "I am thinking of you."
